Abstract

Indonesia faces pressing environmental issues, many of which are related to citizens' lifestyles. Therefore, community-based environmental education is needed to encourage pro-environmental behavior. We examined parents' perspectives on their household sanitation situations and teachers' awareness of environmental education in junior high school in Indonesia to consider what types of environmental education are needed to promote pro-environmental behavior. We conducted a cross-sectional study among 350 parents and 17 junior high school teachers in Makassar City, Indonesia. We administered a questionnaire on household sanitation situations to the parents and conducted semi-structured interviews with the teachers. The analysis in
